

Fitzgerald High School expands CTE options

By Sayak Kapali and Abid Ahmed

Fitzgerald High School's Intro to TV production is a bustling class of hardworking and creative students. Intro to TV is a course that gives students a first look basis of the world of working behind and in front of the camera.

It prides itself as a class that gives students responsibility and freedom to work on their projects at their own pace. On its timeline of students' works, there is a clear indicator of improvement and the growth of production quality.

Teacher in charge, Brooke Smith, took the opportunity to file to for her class to become a CTE certified class.

After a year to fully prepare her state application, Intro to TV Production is now certified as a CTE (Career and Technical Education) Course.

The funding allows for the course to have more equipment and materials that will aid in students' creativity.

The curriculum has an advisory committee comprised of schools and business partners that give advice and insight into the industry.

The class has access to more hands-on activities, newer editing software, and equipment due to being CTE certified.

When asked on the idea of, "What's next?", Brooke Smith responded with her plans of getting her advanced course—TV Production—to reach the status of being CTE certified so that the students taking that course can also relish in the benefits of better funding for enhanced equipment.

Students interested in filmmaking or broadcast production should consider signing up for this class this coming school year as it is something that they definitely won't want to miss.

Now students have more real-world opportunities, equipment reflecting the quality expected in the industry, and upgraded editing software such as Adobe's Premiere Pro.

This opportunity will be able to show students what the professionals of today are using to deliver the content that the world is seeing.

The recent CTE certification has assisted the Intro to TV Production to push better production.
