What is mental health?

Everyone has mental health. Mental health is how we think, feel and act as we face the daily ups and downs of our lives. Our mental health helps determine how we cope with stress and change, make choices and decisions, and relate with other people.

All people feel sad, angry, worried, and out of control at times. This is a normal part of life. Sometimes, however, a person's thoughts, feelings, or behavior become too hard for them to manage and get in the way of their ability to cope with the every day demands of home, school, and/or relationships. This may be a sign of an emerging mental health concern. Mental health problems can affect people of any age, from early childhood throughout the life cycle.

Mental health problems in children and adolescents are more common than most people think. In the United States it is estimated that one in five children and adolescents has some mental health related issue.

Help is available

To find mental health and related supports, you may:

- Call your child's physician or school counselor for names of local mental health providers
- Call your local community mental health center, (name and number) to make an appointment with a mental health provider
- Use your computer and go to ?online database? where you can search for mental health professionals in \(name of your community\) who are best suited to meet the needs of your child
- Dial 2-1-1 on your phone to speak with an information and referral specialist who can help you find mental health and related supports for your child in our community
- Call (family advocacy or support organization/s) to be linked with a family support organization that can help you find the right resources for your child.

Getting the right support for your child is not always easy. Despite the challenges you may face, getting help for mental health issues is really important!

Did you know:

- Health Insurance may cover the cost of child and/or family mental health services.
- Many mental health providers will adjust their fees based on a family's ability to pay.
- In (your town), most schools have mental health providers working at the school to support students and families closer to home.
- Some mental health providers in (name of your community) provide mental health services right in your home.
- Interpreters are available for families who do not speak English.

Some warning signs

Though mental health problems are not always easy to see in children and adolescents, there are some signs and symptoms you can be on the lookout for.

Thinking

Persistent nightmares
Unusual thoughts or beliefs
Thoughts that race too fast
Poor concentration
Inability to focus attention
Hearing of voices that cannot be explained
Suicidal thoughts

Feelings

Feelings of sadness or hopelessness
Angry feelings
Anxious or worried feelings
Extreme fear
Sense of worthlessness and guilt
Sense of agitation and uneasiness
Feelings that life is too hard or has no meaning

It is important to note that many of these signs and symptoms may occur as part of a child and/or adolescent's normal development. If you are not certain if you should seek help for your child, contact your child's healthcare provider or school counselor for guidance.

Behavior

Decrease in school performance
Loss of interest or effort in things he or she usually enjoys
Unexplained changes in sleeping, and/or eating habits
Frequent crying and overreaction to small things
Avoidance of friends or family
Hyperactivity or frequent fidgeting
Frequent breaking of rules and/or getting in trouble with the law
Use of alcohol or other drugs
Threats of hurting him or herself or other people
Lack of remorse or guilt when others are hurt
Dangerous or life threatening actions
Cruelty to animals
Fire setting

What causes mental health problems?

The causes of mental health problems are complicated and not yet fully understood. It is known, however, that mental health issues may come from a combination of different factors including a person's biology (e.g. genetics, chemical imbalances in the body) and from environmental factors (e.g. stressful or harmful experiences, exposure to harmful chemicals.)

Whatever the cause, a person with a mental health issue is not to blame for their difficulties. They cannot "just stop" the problem when they want to.

Getting help early is important

Without the right help, children and adolescents with mental health issues are at a higher risk to develop other difficulties, such as school failure or drop-out, problematic behavior, and even suicide. Identifying problems early and getting appropriate treatment can help children reach their full potential and may prevent more significant problems from developing. Getting help early is important!

Where do I go to get mental health

There are many places you can go to get assistance with and/or advice about the mental health of your child. Talking with your child's pediatrician or school counselor is a good place to start. You may also talk with a therapist whose job it is to understand and provide support with mental health issues. If you are not sure where to start, ask someone you trust- perhaps a friend or family member, your child's teacher, healthcare provider or a member of the clergy- to help you get connected with the resources your child may need.

What can I expect?

When you first seek mental health support or advice, you will likely be asked to set up a meeting to discuss your concerns and what changes you have noticed in your child's thinking, feelings, and/or behavior. As a parent, you know your child better than anyone. Because of this, your input is very important in developing the best mental health care plan for your child. You can expect to be included in all decisions regarding your child and the development of their mental health care plan.
